Going Into Labor on Labor Day Weekend? Don't Forget to Pay Attention to Your Paycheck

Scottsdale, Arizona, September 2, 2005 -- Jennifer Fletcher is expecting the arrival of her first child this Labor Day weekend. For Fletcher, Labor Day weekend 2005 will likely bring a big change in her life. Big life changes, such as the birth of a child, are also times that affect your tax liability. Proper payroll withholding planning ensures your tax liability is covered.

"I didn't know that having a baby could affect my take-home pay," Fletcher said. By anticipating changes in family status, such as the birth of a child, or changes in marital status, you can adjust your withholding to more closely match the new anticipated liability. Labor Day marks the start of National Payroll Week, September 5-9 and is an ideal time for people to analyze their paycheck closely. Nearly every working American receives a paycheck but few ever focus on how to maximize their take-home pay through management of their withholding allowances.

The best way for you to maximize your net pay and figure out the ideal mix of withholdings and deductions is to use the free paycheck calculator located at www.PaycheckCity.com. Here you can model "what-if" scenarios with your paycheck numbers, adjust your withholding, see the impact of voluntary savings programs and retirement plans, note the tax advantage of cafeteria benefit plans, and see in advance what will happen when you change your marital status or have a baby.
