Experience Science Fiction Museum

Today's the day, science- and speculative-fiction fans: Seattle's Experience Science Fiction museum opens to the public. (Thanks, Paul Allen!) Check here for information on the festivities and to find out about upcoming events, speakers, and exhibits. (Those interested in being museum members can also find out how that's done here, and frankly who doesn't want to know what it takes to become a Terran or a Replicant?) — HSS

Juneteenth Worldwide Celebration

Saturday, June 19th, marks the 139th annual commemoration of the day when American slaves in Galveston, Texas first received word of the Emancipation Proclamation; the event has grown into a worldwide celebration of the end of slavery around the world – both those systems that have been abolished and those that still need to be. Find out about celebrations around the country or get ideas for your own celebration here. — HSS

PayCheckCity

This site is exactly what it claims to be in the title bar: employee self-service tools to better manage your paycheck. What the title bar doesn't mention is how very helpful these tools are for workers contemplating how to make their dollars perform at peak capacity, or for folks in the process of segueing from freelance or contract-based employment to a more permanent position. Bookmark this one; if you don't need it now, you will eventually. — HSS
